Q: Does IrriPro have any validation functionality? {#Sec12} A: IrriPro has a validation system which identifies flow problems and offers solutions. The IrriPro validation system is a dynamic system. It provides suggestions based on an analysis of the tests being performed. These suggestions are based on a statistical analysis of the data over multiple years. How does the validation system work? The validation system provides a test for the user to improve a design. This involves identifying a bad test that needs to be removed to improve the design. For example, the validation system will identify a test that is not pumping as a bad test. IrriPro will identify solutions that will pump the field and then validate that the solution works. The validation process is as follows: Select a field. You can choose any field for testing. Select a preferred pump for your field. You can select a pump based on the same design characteristics that you are testing for. If the preferred pump has no more data, add a test to the validation system. Select a preferred filter for your field. You can select a filter based on the same design characteristics that you are testing for. Select a preferred pump for your field. You can select a pump based on the same design characteristics that you are testing for. Select 82157476af
